Insure.com Survey Shows Medicare for All Increasingly Wins for Health Reform

By Insure.com Posted on February 26, 2020

Yet, only 9% of respondents express willingness to accept a significant tax hike to pay for it

Foster City, CA – February 26, 2020 – Medicare for all health reform was the most popular health reform in a just published insure.com survey of 1,000 people, with 25% of respondents favoring that approach over other options. This is up from last fall's survey results showing 21% indicating that Medicare for all is the best approach to reforming health care.

The survey also finds growing support (23%) for improving the Affordable Care Act rather than other reforms, such as a public option. The public option dropped in support since last fall's survey.

Insure's managing editor, Les Masterson, observes that health reform preferences are different depending upon the type of coverage respondents currently have. But, what most of those surveyed have in common is a preference to pay as little as nothing to 5% more in taxes to cover the cost of a Medicare for all program.

“Twenty-three percent (23%) of respondents say they have no objection to Medicare for all, but are unwilling to incur any amount of tax increase to implement the program,” explains Masterson. “Of those willing to accept a higher tax bill, the largest portion of respondents, 23%, indicate they are willing to pay a tax increase of up to 5%.”

Interestingly, two-thirds of those who currently have Medicare or Medicaid coverage say they do not support a Medicare for all approach and do not want any tax increases related to that type of health reform.

As election activity heats up, consumers’ preferences on health reform are evolving. Below are changes levels of support for health reform options among those currently receiving coverage through their employers:

Reform type	Fall, 2019	Winter, 2020
No reform	8%	15%
Medicare for all	16%	24%
Repeal ACA	19%	16%
Improve ACA	7%	24%
