Best credit ratings; National Association of Insurance Commissioners' complaint data; and, for health insurers, National Committee for Quality Assurance's Health Plan Ratings, which evaluates health plans on the quality of patient care.

Insurers' average premiums, rate increases after a traffic incident, multi-policy discounts and other factors were included in the equation to arrive at the best of the best.

It should be noted that USAA often ranks as a top insurer. But because the company only offers coverage to military members, veterans and their families, it is scored but not included in the rankings.

"The editors compiled these rankings to give consumers looking for insurance insight into which companies provide the best auto, home, health and life insurance," said Nupur Gambhir, managing editor of Insure.com. "Choosing the right insurer isn't easy. And just because a carrier is a leader in our ranking doesn't necessarily make it the best insurance provider for everyone. People should shop around to find the company that best fits their needs and budget."

Gambhir is available to comment on this annual research and discuss how consumer preferences for insurance are evolving.
